To function optimally, organizations need their portfolios, investments, resources, and project plans in one place. And, they need a system capable of aligning information and decisions at every level, from top to bottom. To be successful, that system must meet the varied demands of enterprise usage and facilitate work—instead of creating more of it.

Artemis 7 (A7) from Aurea Planning Solutions is the only end-to-end enterprise system offering real-time portfolio and resource management reporting to empower decision making and collaboration. It features panoramic views into portfolio management, financial and resource management, and program and project governance.

Centralize critical enterprise data

A7 supports agile decision-making by offering transparency of investment, project, and resource data. That data can then inform diverse processes, departments and teams to maximize project and portfolio ROI. Enterprise decision makers can customize information flow to foster powerful collaboration, and efficiently rationalize and socialize decisions across the organization.

Connect budgets to performance and goals

To truly align organizational goals with both a larger business context and human capital, companies must connect budget to performance and goals. To do this, companies need a clear roadmap of what it aims to achieve, and how. Only then can its leadership reliably connect project performance and goals to company aspirations. Once that connection is made, budget decisions are easier to make since they're well-supported by data.

Artemis 7 tracks and evaluates project goals and performance in real-time, so organizational leadership can respond to risks and known issues—and also make budget allocations that align company outcomes with project goals and performance.
